About

Performance information is a key contributor to process improvements and the development of the industry by providing quantitative and qualitative impetus. The industry can be defined as the built environment, the delivery of services, goods, and information technology. In addition, in order to sustain and improve the industry, new educational approaches are necessary. The value in performance information can be seen in the application of the information to: identify a challenge, improve or refine a process, and initiate change. The value can be perceived at numerous levels and entities within an organization or across a project.

The journal seeks to be a source for documented performance information and to serve as a guidepost for lessons learned, best practices, the proliferation of performance based value models in the international built environment, as well as improving the delivery of services, including education. The JAPIV seeks to engage researchers and practitioners alike.

The journal is open access, with all current and previous issues distributed online. We encourage anyone to register online to submit or be a reviewer for our journal who supports and works towards our goals.
