Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Sustainable building is an integral part of urban development, producing environmentally responsible, socially inclusive, economically prudent, and resilient built infrastructure, communities, spaces, and cities. The common practices, ethical issues, technologies, and global perspectives are yet to be aggregated for the theoretical stocktaking and practical application of sustainable building for urban development. The goals of this Special Issue are twofold. The first goal is to foster sustainable building practices for urban development. The second one is to create new research knowledge in the built environment field to maximize the impacts of the built environment in urban futures.

- Professional ethics and ethical concerns in sustainable urban development;
- Responsible sourcing for building construction;
- Net-zero building for sustainable urban development;
- Application of ESG standards and measurement tools;
- Community networks for sustainable building against natural disasters;
- Digital technologies for accessing sustainable urban building solutions;
- Sustainable urban transport systems application;
